CORDIERITE STRIKES a CHORD

The feedback following last week's article on our Strathbogies' granite has created a lot of interest.

Prof. Neil Phillips has agreed to run another lecture in the district later in the year, so watch this space.

Andrew Holloway from Terip has also provided this link to a paper about the Terip Terip granite, and specifically about Cordierite, written by Prof. George Baker in 1940
http://www.minsocam.org/ammin/AM25/AM25_543.pdf

Having attended Prof Neil Phillips' Creightons Creek presentation and after reading Prof. George Baker's research paper, it is now abundantly clear to me that we're farming on the top of one bloody big rock.

Cordierite is the black fleck material that is commonly, and almost exclusively, found in granite within the Strathbogie Ranges.

Cordierite, which was discovered in 1813, is named after the French geologist Louis Cordier (1777-1861)

Cordierite is a magnesium iron aluminium cyclosilicate.

The Indian lunchbox delivery system has its failings and in this case the man delivers her lunchbox to a lonely widower by mistake. After some hesitation, they exchange notes with each other-sharing their stories, regrets and confessions. A beautifully crafted film, colourful in the way only a film set in India can be, with some comedic moments in a celebration of life's small pleasures that take place within the disillusioned middle class of India. Although this has subtitles there is some English spoken and it is easy to follow
